ABOUT PLANTING AND GROWING

The Gladiolus is as easy to grow as the onion, and no one need be afraid to try them. It thrives in any soil and in almost any location where it is not too dry, but does best on a nice rich sandy loam in sunny location. Manure is needed to fertilize, but should not be put on fresh. A piece of ground that was manured the previous year will produce best specimens of bulbs and bloom.

Plant in rows 12 to 18 inches apart, with bulbs 3 to 8 inches apart in row, according to size of bulb, and space available. May be placed closer together if necessary.

Depth of planting differs from 5 to 3 inches, according to size of bulb, the larger the deeper.

By making successive plantings over a period of eight weeks, with a good number of bulbs, a fine succession of bloom will be secured. Also different size bulbs of the same variety bloom at different times, the larger ones coming out first.

Glads like plenty of water, but a great deal should not be applied to the soil unless there is good drainage. Ordinarily frequent cultivation is of more benefit than application of water, as there is usually sufficient rainfall to supply moisture.

Cut the flowers in the morning, when full of moisture. Leave four or five leaves on the plant, so that a new bulb may be formed for next year. Cut spikes when two or three buds are open. The others will open in water, and the spike will last for a week or ten days.
